WE BELIEVE

Children are born curious and eager to learn about their environment and their world. They aggressively seek sensory input in an effort to understand how things work. A well rounded approach to learning must address this natural drive by providing our children opportunities to satisfy their need to play with, touch, and experience the things around them.

Fingerprints Youth Museum advocates this enriched method of teaching and learning by ensuring each child has the opportunity to physically manipulate objects in a controlled learning environment as a means of enhancing learning and retention.
